

"cooling," but he could not see the face because of the veil which was over it. The man, says Glennon, paid little attention to either the woman or child, but kept looking out of the car window. It was he who made the move to leave the car when they did, and the police believe that he was simply watching from the window for a place favorable to the commission of the crime he contemplated.

WOMAN FINDS THE BODY.

It was Mrs. Dudley Valentine, wife of Alderman Valentine, of Yonkers, who found the body of the dead child. With her own two children she started for Belmont Park for a walk. Near the Empire City track she met a man named Forbes, who told her he had seen something that looked like a child's clothing in the bushes a few feet away. Mrs. Valentine immediately went to the place and found the body of the child there. It must have been dark when it was thrown there, as no real attempt to conceal it had been made. The shrubbery behind which it was found is near an old sewer and it is possible that the murderer thought he had thrown the body in the sewer.

Mrs. Valentine sent off for help, and while she was waiting for it to come she met a man who acted strangely. She detained him by talking to him until the arrival of a policeman. Then the policeman questioned him and his answers were so satisfactory that he allowed him to go. The Yonkers police were indignant over this man's release until they heard Conductor Glennon's story. Now they are convinced that this man could have had nothing to do with the crime.

MURDERED IN BRUTAL FASHION.

The marks on the neck of the dead child show that its murder was carried out in most brutal style. The police think that the man probably throttled the baby while it was lying across the woman's knee, although the finger marks are small enough to have been the imprint of the woman. At least one hand was held over the throat as there are finger marks under each ear as well as others along the front of the throat.

So far no progress has been made in establishing the identity of the murdered baby. The clothing bore no mark that could be traced, but the police still hope that some one will come forward who will recognize the little one. Such a clue beyond a doubt would lead straight to the murderers. The police believe that they will soon find some one who knows the child. The little one was too well dressed to belong to any poor family and ought to be easily identified by some one, if not by the pretty face at least by the clothing.

propriating the funds of the bank. Both men waived a hearing and were bound over to the Grand Jury, which meets in February.

It was expected that both of the alleged Carnegie notes would be produced in court.

Receiver Lyons had been subpoenaed to appear at the hearing and to bring with him all securities found in the Oberlin Bank bearing the signature or indorsement either of C. L. Chadwick or Andrew Carnegie.

The $500,000 note is specifically mentioned in the subpoena, but could not be produced. Receiver Lyons will be authorized by the District Attorney, if necessary, to blow open the safe deposit vault of President Beckwith to get the note.

As the bank officials waived examination neither the receiver nor other witnesses were called to-day.

The specific charge against Beckwith is that he gave a certified check for $15,000 to Mrs. Chadwick on Oct. 29 of last year, and against Spear that he gave one for $12,500 on Aug. 4, when they knew there was no fund in the bank to cover the amount.

"CAN'T GET BAIL," SAYS BECKWITH.

Bail was fixed at $10,000 each. Beckwith told the marshal he would not give bonds, but would go to jail after being arraigned. He said: "I know of no one who will go for me and I shall certainly not ask any one to sign my bonds. I have come to the end of my string and I shall accept whatever fate is in store for me. If no one volunteers to be my security I suppose a prison cell will be my resting place. I have told all in connection with the case that I possibly can and have nothing more to say until the case comes for trial."

The old man was shown the greatest consideration by the United States officers, but he seemed not to care what happened. Spear, who is a comparatively young man, was exactly the opposite, and was active in his efforts to secure a bondsman. His bond was finally signed by former County Treasurer Lander of Cuyahoga.

Mrs. Chadwick, who is said to be ill with a nervous breakdown at her rooms at the Holland House, was somewhat improved to-day. Lawyer Ryall called on her during the morning and had a long conference.

Deputy Sheriff Blinn, who served the attachment papers on Saturday in the name of Louis suit, was at the hotel again this morning and asked for an inventory of Mrs. Chadwick's effects. He was given but little satisfaction, being referred to the hotel's lawyers.

Ira Reynolds, Secretary-Treasurer of the Waco Park Bank, who is said to hold the mysterious securities of Mrs. Chadwick, amounting to $5,000,000, as a personal trustee, is on his way here, according to a despatch from Cleveland and is expected this afternoon.

FRAUD CHARGED IN FAIR AWARDS

President Carter, of United Exhibitors' Association, at St. Louis, Tells of Damaging Affidavits, and Wants Inquiry.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 5.—In a letter to Mayor J. G. Thompson, President of the United Exhibitors' Association, made public to-day, President Thomas H. Carter, of the National World's Fair Commission, declared that "most grave and serious charges of corruption in connection with the awarding of certain premiums" have been filed with the National Commission.

The letter, after quoting that part of the act of Congress, making an appropriation for the exposition which provides that the appointment of all judges and examining for the exposition and the awarding of premiums, if any, shall be done and performed by the Exposition Company, subject, however, to the approval of the National Commission created by Section II of this act," continues as follows:

"Under the rules adopted by the company and approved by the commission, the group of jurors were to be appointed by the company before Aug. 1, 1901. Some of the jurors were submitted to the commission for approval in accordance with the provisions of the rules and regulations."

"A number of those who were not submitted to the commission for approval, but who had performed their functions and submitted their reports and many of them have not been approved."

"Most grave and serious charges of corruption in connection with the awarding of certain premiums have been filed with the commission in the form of affidavits and statements. In view of such charges and the failure of the company to observe the law in the appointment and submission of the jurors for approval by the commission, the right of this body to investigate and award premiums is maintained by the commission to be a duty precedent to the act of awarding premiums."

REDMOND, TERENCE, No. 304 Chestnut street, Brooklyn, ankle broken; New York Hospital.

WEBER, E. J., legs hurt; went home.

Eleven men were injured and thirty automobiles were destroyed this afternoon in a fire that threatened for a time to wipe out the block between Broadway, Seventh avenue, Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth streets. The blaze grew out of a gasoline explosion in the two-story automobile garage at Nos. 14 and 16 West Thirty-ninth street. The injured men were hurt by the blowing oil or by jumping for their lives from the windows on the second floor.

The garage, which is one of the largest in the city, and is in the heart of the garage district, sheltered about forty automobiles, and there were twenty men at work in the building. There was a small fire on the ground floor at 10 o'clock this morning, but it was extinguished by the employees without calling for assistance from the fire department.

Chief Croker, after an investigation, says that the fire this afternoon might easily have been much more serious because of the remarkable circumstances under which it originated. He has asked the police to look for the driver of a big gasoline tank from a 199 gallon tank under the floor of the garage was being filled when the blaze was first noticed.

How the Fire Started.

The tank, according to Chief Croker, was hauled into the garage a little after noon. The driver made a connection by tube between his tank and the tank in the cellar, and the fluid was just beginning to run.

A spark set fire to a little pool of gasoline under a machine that was being repaired near by. The men, excited by the fire that had been extinguished only a short time before, shouted "Fire," and some of them broke for the doors.

The driver of the gasoline tank took no chances. Jumping to his seat, he lashed his powerful horses with his whip and they started on a gallop. The connection between the tank on the wheels and the tank under the floor was broken and gasoline gushed in a stream from the dangling tube, flooding the floor.

The blaze swept over the gasoline with the quickness of lightning and soon established a connection with the partially filled tank under the floor. The explosive vapors caught fire, and tank, roof and everything else in the vicinity went up into the air with a roar.

In the meantime the employees, knowing that an explosion was inevitable, got out as best they could. Those on the second floor jumped without hesitation. The driver of the gasoline tank turned up Seventh avenue, leaving a trail of oil behind him. He was out of sight by the time the firemen arrived.

Mayor McClellan and Commissioner McAdoo had their automobiles stored in the garage. It is reported that both of them were lost. The employees say that only one machine was run out unharmed, and that this one was all ready to depart when the fire started. It was a big touring car, and the owner was seated in it. When he saw the danger he turned on full power and went out like a rocket, tearing down half the door.

Noise Heard Blocks Away.

The noise of the explosion was heard as far away as Longacre Square. A column of smoke and fire fifty feet high shot out of the burning building, and blazing embers and sheets of oil fell upon all the roofs about the neighborhood.

An attempt was made to get some of the machines out of the Standard garage, but the fire spread so rapidly that little success was attained. There were forty expensive automobiles in the place, most of them big imported touring machines. After the blaze got to them they exploded like firecrackers.

There is a garage in Seventh avenue, right around the corner from the Standard, and another in Thirty-eighth street, directly to the rear. All the automobiles in these places were run out, while fire raged on the roofs from the blazing building.

Firemen in Great Danger.

The section in which the fire started is the automobile garage centre of the city. A company's men of about half a dozen men were working on the roof of the building when the fire started. They were in great danger.

NAN PATTERSON PICKS JURYMEN

sel in the reception room of the Tombs before court convened that she fully expected to be with her mother on Christmas. She had received a letter from home in the early mail telling her that her mother was fast recovering her strength and that this recovery was largely due to the belief that her daughter would be freed on the murder charge and returned to her on the festival day of the year.

There were 300 talesmen in court when Justice Davis came on the bench, 30 who had been subpoenaed in the Patterson special panel, and 100 of the regular court panel. The 100 were discharged by Clerk Penney when he was notified that the young woman was prepared to go on with her trial. The special panel was then worked down to almost half its number, scores presenting excuses that freed them from service.

When Frederick A. Entz, a dry-goods merchant, of No. 118 Park avenue, the first talesman called, took the stand, he scrutinized Mr. Entz with lively interest, leaning forward and lending an eager ear to the candidate's responses. Mr. Entz declared that he had formed a strong opinion about the prisoner's guilt or innocence. In reply to a skilful cross-examination by Mr. Rand, however, he announced that he believed that this prejudice might be overcome by legal evidence.

Henry J. Robinson, sixty-eight years old, the secretary of a railroad corporation, with offices No. 50 Pine street, and who lives at No. 54 East Sixty-sixth street, was the second talesman examined. He satisfied Mr. Rand after a brief examination. Mr. Entz, the attorney for Miss Patterson, carried his questioning to great length. He asked half a dozen questions about Mrs. Robinson's health and a dozen more about his mental poise.

Miss Patterson urged her counsel to submit the talesman, calling their attention to the striking resemblance Mr. Robinson bears to the popular ideal of Santa Claus. "It would be splendid to have a Santa Claus as foreman of my jury at this time of the year," the young woman whispered with a faint smile. The talesman asserted, however, that if a prisoner failed to take the stand and testify her innocence, he would feel sure something was wrong. Therefore Mr. Entz challenged him. The third talesman summoned was only a boy in appearance and was excused by consent of both sides because of his youth. John G. Tholke, of No. 219 West One Hundred and Thirty-first street, collector for a brewery, wanted all kinds of eye-witnesses and had developed a firm prejudice against capital punishment since he was qualified on the special jury list. William Newman, of No. 46 East Eighty-seventh street, the fifth talesman called, had also recently become prejudiced against the death penalty, and was consequently rejected.

Actress Is Suburban.

Almost half an hour was consumed in examining Adam Miller, a decorative painter, of No. 53 West Eighth street, out, though he qualified in every particular, the prisoner would not permit him to be accepted, and he was challenged peremptorily. He was sixty-one years old and lived at the "Florence" girl, upon looking at him, said she did not want to take any chances with apoplexy.

Thomas H. Harmer, receiving teller of the Nassau Bank, of No. 26 West Eighty-fifth street, was accepted by both sides and sworn as foreman of the jury. He was the twelfth talesman examined. Though he knew both Mr. Entz and Mr. Rand, his partner, as depositions in the box he is employed in the prosecution made no objection to him. This fact had considerable weight with Miss Patterson, for he is past the age she had set as the limit for when she would accept as her peers. In examining William John Lee, of No. 246 Crotona avenue, the Bronx, men found that the medical curative defendant had not known what she was doing to the time the crime was committed, the fact would have any weight with him.

Mr. Rand jumped up and said: "That is the first suggestion we have had that the defense will set up insanity as an excuse."

Mr. Rand then explained that he had not hinted at any such new defense because he had merely been putting a hypothetical question to the talesman. After a few more questions Mr. Lee was sworn as the second juror.

First Snow Storm of Winter Here

Father Boreas set to work plucking his Xmas duck shortly before 2 o'clock this afternoon, and the feathers of snow went scattering all over New York and the surrounding region. It's the first real snow of the season in this city and the weather officials say it is going to keep on falling until well into to-morrow. They have an idea that there may be sleet, too.

The storm that is here has been galloping northward all day. Its centre was over Eastern Alabama this morning. Signals warning mariners are displayed along the coast from Columbia, S. C., to Sandy Hook, for it is forecasted that there will be heavy northeast winds to-night and to-morrow.

When the snow began to fall first the traffic over the Brooklyn Bridge began to slow down and congest.

Horses falling on the roadway and across the tracks used by the trolleys tied up the traffic every few minutes, and the cars snailed along all afternoon. At one time there were lines of cars on either side of the bridge from Manhattan to Brooklyn.

SHOT BY TRAIN ROBBER.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 5.—An attempt to rob the express car on the Santa Fe westbound overland train No. 1 was made early today. Wells-Fargo messenger Roberts was shot and probably fatally wounded. The hold-up occurred at Daguerre, Cal., on the Mojave Desert, which is the junction of the Santa Fe with the Salt River Road.

The robber, who is said to have been a negro, is thought to have broken in the door of the express car when the train stopped at Daguerre. The messenger resisted and was shot twice. His injuries are said to be fatal, and he is unable to make any statement about the robber. It is not known whether or not he succeeded in securing any booty.

NOTED PHYSICIANS OF EUROPE HAVE PRESCRIBED COD LIVER OIL.

As the Greatest Curative Agent and Strength Creator Known to Medicine.

But they have also admitted that owing to the vile, nauseating grease which it contained, and which had no curative value whatever, it was impossible for patients to take the systems enough to obtain the best results.

Therefore the discovery of two French chemists how to get the benefit of the valuable curative elements of the Cod Liver without the oil was hailed with delight by physicians the world over. The French men found that the medicinal curative could be separated from the grease and oil and produced in a concentrated form delicious to the taste and acceptable to the weakest stomach. Thus was created Vinol, which is sold by the following local druggists on a positive guarantee to return money whenever it fails to do all they claim for it.
